Abstract. Shaanxi Province has a long history, and the famous Tang Dynasty in ancient China was once located here. The cultural background is strong, and the man-made historical landscape relies on its development and the success of the Tang Dynasty Never Nights City also benefits from this. With its successful development, many tourism industries are vying to imitate it. The homogenization of man-made landscapes has affected the sustainable development of Shaanxi's cultural tourism industry. This study mainly focuses on analyzing the problem and giving the way to solve it, finding the problem through field investigation and making a questionnaire to investigate and analyze the problem, and finding the essence of the problem and the way to solve it from the comparative analysis of the two scenic spots of Tang Dynasty Never Nights City and Chongquan Ancient Town. This study proposes several strategies to address landscape homogenization, providing a reference for the future development of man-made historic landscapes and emphasizing the importance of differentiated design and diversified development.

Keywords: Homogenization, Man-made Historical Landscapes, tourism industries, field investigation, making a questionnaire, Tang Dynasty Never Nights City, Chongquan Ancient Town.

1. Introduction

According to data from the Shaanxi Provincial Department of Culture and Tourism, in recent years, the rich cultural and natural heritage resources of Shaanxi Province have gradually attracted widespread attention. It is recognized that it is necessary to strengthen the holistic and systematic protection of these heritage resources in order to promote the deep integration of culture and tourism so as to promote high-quality economic and social development [1]. Culture, as an important part of national development, is gradually penetrating the lives of the public through tourism, a way of cultural communication. Travelers are exposed to, understood, and passed on to culture through travel. However, the rapid development of tourism, the accompanying commercialization trend, excessive administrative intervention, and the involvement of a large number of social capitals have gradually led to the homogenization of the tourism landscape [2].

At present, most of the research on the tourism landscape focuses on the field of rural tourism [3, 4], while the research on man-made historical landscapes could be stronger. Although there are many studies on the phenomenon of homogenization, there are few case studies involving man-made historical landscapes [5, 6], and there needs to be more in-depth systematic discussion on this phenomenon. In order to fill this research gap, this paper deeply reveals the common homogenization problem in contemporary man-made historical landscapes through a comparative analysis of two typical man-made historical landscapes, Tang Dynasty Never Nights City and Chongquan Ancient Town, combined with field research and questionnaire survey and proposes corresponding solutions.

As an innovative model for the integration of culture and tourism [7], since the remarkable success of the Tang Dynasty Never Nights City, many similar landscapes have followed suit, resulting in the phenomenon of blind borrowing and copying in an endless stream and the historical man-made landscapes in Shaanxi and even across the country have gradually presented a "cookie-cutter" situation [8]. Although the proliferation of homogenization presents the prosperity and diversity of various landscapes on the surface, in essence, the design mode of scenic spots converges and lacks unique cultural connotations and personalities, resulting in only a handful of successful cases [2].

K. S. B. Ryholt, Adam Bülow-Jacobsen, 1997 The Second Intermediate Period designates the 250 year period 1800-1550 BC which separates the two glorious periods of the Middle Kingdom and the New Kingdom During the 19th century BC an invasion by Canaanite tribes into the Delta took place Around 1800 BC these people proclaimed their own king and the Delta thus became independent from the rest of Egypt Egypt remained split between the Canaanitic rulers in North and the native Egyptian Kings in the South for the rest of the Second Intermediate Period The division of Egypt brought about an economic decline and the entire period is characterized by a lack of royal monuments This circumstance has greatly hampered any attempts to establish a chronology of the period and as a consequence it has been very difficult to date many sources which are relevant for the social and political situation of the period The Second Intermediate Period has therefore remained one of the most obscure periods of Egypt s ancient history The dissertation is a new attempt to establish a chronology for the Second Intermediate Period and define the different kingdoms their territories and political relations The study consists of four main chapters three appendixes a catalogue of sources bibliography and indices Included is a catalogue of all the historical sources about 1500 known to certify the names of the Egyptian kings of the Second Intermediate Period Each source is described in terms of type origin and present location followed by bibliographical references
