

Tips for improving your writing

Any piece of writing that we do will depend on three things:

1

Content

We must think about what we are actually going to write.

Where do I start?

You can't write anything if you haven't got anything to say! Obvious, right? But it's easy to start writing and then run out of steam. To avoid this make sure you choose the question you are going to answer carefully and plan your answer before you start to make sure you've got enough to say about the topic. If you can't think of at least five points to make, choose a different question.

How can I make the content good?

- Follow the bullet points in the question and keep looking back at the question so you don't wander off the subject!
- Use the techniques you've learnt for making writing persuasive, exciting, powerful, emotive...e.g., rhetorical questions, lists of 3, similes and metaphors, alliteration, emotive language, descriptive language, argument markers, varied sentence lengths etc.

Audience

We should always consider who we are writing for.

A letter starting 'Alright mate!' would be fine for a friend, but not for your local MP! Similarly, you wouldn't write 'Dear Sir / Madam' to your best friend! You need to use the right tone and language –it may be formal (Standard English, no slang) or informal (chatty, colloquial, friendly).

3

Purpose

We also need to think about why we are writing.

Are you writing to entertain, interest, argue, persuade, frighten, create tension, give information...?
