linger by these graves and had none of the tender sorrow mingled with high and tender hopes that had sometimes made it seem good to him to be there Such moods perhaps often come to the aged when the hardened earth crust over their souls shuts them out from spiritual influences Taking the child by the hand her little effervescence of infantile fun having passed into a downcast humor though not well knowing as yet what a dusky cloud of disheartening fancies arose from these green hillocks he went heavily toward the garden gate Close to its threshold so that one who was issuing forth or entering must needs step upon it or over it lay a small flat stone deeply imbedded in the ground and partly covered with grass inscribed with the name of Dr John Swinnerton Physician Ay said the old man as the well remembered figure of his ancient instructor seemed to rise before him in his grave apparel with beard and gold headed cane black velvet doublet and cloak here lies a man who as people have thought had it in his power to avoid the grave He had no little grandchild to tease him He had the choice to die and chose it So the old gentleman led Pansie over the stone and carefully closed the gate and as it happened he forgot the uprooted shrub which Pansie as she ran had flung away and which had fallen into the open grave and when the funeral came that afternoon the coffin was let down upon it so that its bright inauspicious flower never bloomed again
