The Dragon Queen Theodoros Mythopoulos, In the realm of Drakmoor where the ancient mountains kissed the clouds and rivers ran silver with starlight there lived a queen whose very presence commanded the respect of both mortals and immortals alike Queen Seraphina Drakeborn had ruled for seven years her reign marked by wisdom and an uncanny ability to communicate with the great dragons that dwelt in the highest peaks of her kingdom The palace of Drakmoor was carved into the living rock of Mount Thyraleth its spires reaching toward the heavens like the fingers of some primordial giant Golden veins of precious metal ran through the dark stone walls catching the light of countless crystal chandeliers that hung like frozen stars throughout the vast halls It was here in the throne room where ancient dragon bones formed archways overhead that Queen Seraphina held court each morning as the sun painted the eastern sky in shades of amber and rose On this particular dawn however something was amiss The queen sat upon her throne a magnificent seat carved from a single piece of obsidian and inlaid with scales shed by the dragon lords themselves Her crown wrought from the purest gold and set with emeralds that gleamed like dragon eyes seemed heavier than usual upon her brow The weight was not physical for the crown was made with magic that rendered it light as a feather but rather the burden of knowledge that pressed upon her soul Seraphina s advisor the wise mage Aldric Stormweaver approached the throne with measured steps His robes of deep blue silk rustled softly in the morning silence and the crystal staff he carried glowed with a gentle inner light Aldric had served the royal family for forty
