Teachers' Decision Making in EFL Classroom Zhang Youwen,2017-07-17 Master s Thesis from the year 2017 in the subject Didactics for the subject English Pedagogy Literature Studies language English abstract This research attempts to make its contribution to the growing sociolinguistic literature on classroom foreign second language learning and teaching It reports a comparative ethnographic inquiry into the similarities and differences of decision making and decision making process employed by two categories of teachers when approaching planning and instruction in the language classrooms in Chinese EFL teaching context And the thought provoking reasons for these similarities and differences have also been explored through the analysis of a range of broad research questions i e first how do two sets of teachers approach instructional decisions in the similar settings second can we have access to the similarities and differences between their instructional decisions third what factors might affect their pedagogical decisions and fourth are their instructional decisions consistent with their theoretical ideas Two categories of teachers consist of five Chinese TEL and five western teachers respectively who work in two similar teaching institutions in China The selected basic data gathered through a sequence of survey observations and particular information elicitation techniques consist of the running accounts of observation lesson plans and over fifty hours of audio recording of class sessions and interviews Through analysis of selected lesson excerpts and teachers comments on these data we identify similarities and differences in the classroom interpretation of the tasks and participation structures that these teachers adopted in their instruction and the underlying reasons behind them with reference to beliefs context prior experiences and culture The most general conclusion is that whether they emphasize accuracy or fluency and whether they prefer student centered instruction or teacher centered they tend to capitalize on these theories eclectically though they do differ in the extent to which they stress one focus or another Therefore much of a teacher s decision on planning and instruction resides in the way he she interprets the teaching setting and acts on the information from the ongoing classroom interactions In the last two chapters of this book the subject of teacher s decision making is explored from the perspective of soft power and critical discourse analysis so that teachers decision making research can be considered more deeply in the aspect of cognitive discourse and linguistic philosophy

Dynamics of Effective Secondary Teaching ,2008 On the Dynamics of Undergraduate Performance and Dropout Kaj Malm,1982 The development and testing of a process model of undergraduate student performance and the influence of performance on dropout rates are discussed An important feature of the model is a feedback loop that represents knowledge of results A mathematical elaboration of traditional ideas regarding the effect of feedback on performance is included A differential equation is obtained when the rate of change in the performance of a student at some point in time is proportional to the performance at that time minus some constant which is a measure of the performance norm adopted by the student The solution of the equation is the performance function and its outstanding feature is its monotonicity Testing of the model was undertaken with about 2 000 undergraduates enrolled in a 1 year mathematics course at the University of Helsinki Finland during 1975 1980 Each year students were divided into those who failed and those who passed and data were collected on performance and numbers of participants on seven examinations The number who passed divided by the number in the last examination was remarkably stable through the 5 years About 15 percent of the students participating in the last examination failed and almost 90 percent of those who failed dropped out before the last examination The total dropout rates were therefore more or less complementary to pass rates Relative performance and mean standard deviations of the scores were also assessed It is concluded that the theory explained 88 percent of the dropout variance and 81 percent of the variance of the pass rate SW
