

LUTHER BURBANK

the amateur may advantageously begin his work in selective breeding.

The rose and the carnation naturally suggest themselves, but they have been so much worked on that they do not leave so much opportunity for wide improvement as some less popular flowers, though offering grand opportunities for immediate but less unique results.

The tulip is inviting, but calls for a good deal of patience.

Perhaps the four o'clock would serve the purpose as well as any other common flower. Also the hyacinth, the scylla, and the gladiolus are peculiarly good flowers on which to work. There are many beautiful varieties of all of these but new sorts could readily be produced. Moreover, they are grown from bulbs, so any new varieties may easily be perpetuated—a consideration that is by no means without significance to the amateur who wishes to obtain striking results with the least expenditure of time.

Details as to numerous other flowers, including both very common ones and those that are less usual, and varying from the simplest to the most complex, will come to our attention as we now take up in succession the records of my own work during the past four years in the development of new races of flowers.

WORKING WITH A UNIVERSAL FLOWER—THE ROSE

HOW THE BURBANK AND OTHER ROSES WERE PRODUCED

THE most popular of any roses I have so far introduced is undoubtedly the one known as the Burbank.

The popularity of this rose is, I trust, well deserved. But I should not be disposed to admit that its merits are greater than those of many of my newer roses which have not yet made their appearance in public. The popularity of the Burbank is partly to be explained by the fact that it has been a good while before the public.

There is a time element in the introduction of a new flower, just as in the introduction of a new fruit. In fact, no new plant development could be expected to make its way except very gradually at first, although it gains momentum rapidly after a time. In this regard, the introduction of a flower is analogous to the development of the flower itself through successive generations of variation.
