A walkthrough for the Literary Response Paper using Shirley Jackson's "The Lottery"

Generating Ideas

Reading the literary text, breaking the literary text into elements, developing my response

Reading a Literary Text

When you read a literary text to write a paper, whether it is a response or analysis, you will have to read the text multiple times to make sure you understand the text works and what it means

Remember that while you can sometimes choose what text you analyze, your assignment tells you that you must respond to Herman Melville's "Bartleby, the Scrivener" (pages 264-300 of The Seagull Reader: Stories)

I am using Shirley Jackson's "The Lottery" as an example. You may NOT use this story in your response paper.

Breaking a Literary Text into Elements

To be able to talk knowledgably about a text, you need the vocabulary.

By breaking the text into it's elements, I will be able to find effective evidence to support my interpretation of and response to the text

Read the text and take notes, filling out the chart as I go.
