An Analysis of Ultimate Performance Measures to Determine Total Impact of the Fairfax Alcohol Safety Action Project, 1976. Final Report C. Lynn,1977 Project Impact on Ultimate Performance. Analytic Study No. 1 Roy N. Byrd,1977 Evaluation of Best Practices in Traffic Operations and Safety E. D. Arnold,2007 In a previous extensive review of overseas literature researchers identified 42 traffic operations and safety technologies and practices that were not currently deployed in Virginia These were evaluated for their potential application in Virginia and 12 measures were determined to be good candidates for piloting Two of the measures a flashing light emitting diode LED stop sign and optical speed bars two patterns were installed at three locations in Virginia for before and after evaluations The flashing LED stop sign was installed at a T intersection in western Albemarle County Virginia where the number of crashes was higher than expected The measures of effectiveness for the sign were average speed of drivers approaching the sign and compliance with the sign Average speeds decreased significantly statistically after the sign was installed but only by 1 to 3 mph Speeds decreased more during the night than during the day The results of the compliance study were inconclusive Optical speed bars were installed on the centerline and edge line on both approaches to a short section of two lane roadway in Fairfax County Virginia The section of roadway is hazardous as it has inadequate vertical and horizontal alignment narrow lanes and reduced shoulders A number of crashes had occurred on the section over the years including a recent fatality Average speeds both decreased and increased after installation and the decreases were statistically significant right before and in the middle of the section The decreases ranged from 1 to 3 mph Optical speed bars were also installed across lanes on a major four lane undivided highway at two approaches to a reduced speed limit zone in the town of Zuni Virginia Average speeds both decreased and increased after installation The decreases were statistically significant at the beginning of the 45 mph speed zone on each end of town The decreases ranged from 3 to 10 mph Given the general positive results of the installations the report recommends that flashing LED stop signs and optical speed bars be considered as safety countermeasures at appropriate locations where the numbers of crashes or crash rates are higher than expected or where excessive speeding occurs A costs and benefits assessment indicated that generally the benefits in terms of reduced crashes exceeded the costs of the installed measures if only one crash was prevented
