

Year 5 Comprehension 14: The Talking Water Bottle

Every year, around the world, there are a billion water bottles that don't get recycled. They end up in landfills or water bodies. It's bad for the environment. So, some scientists are working on a way to make water bottles that can talk to you. They're called talking water bottles. They're made of a special material that can change its shape. And when you drink from them, they can tell you how much water you've drunk. And they can even tell you when you need to drink more water.

Emily's eyes widened with interest as she read about the new talking water bottles. She asked, "Can you just talk to me, please?"

The talking water bottle said, "Yes, Emily. I can talk, and I'll even tell you when you need to drink more water. But you have to be careful. I can only talk to you when you're drinking from me. So, be sure to drink up!"

Emily's eyes widened with interest as she read about the new talking water bottles. She asked, "How can I make sure you're part of the environment, please?"

The talking water bottle said, "Yes, Emily. You can make sure you're part of the environment by recycling your water bottles. And you can also make sure you're part of the environment by drinking up!"
