The Human Semantic Potential Terry Regier,1996 Drawing on ideas from cognitive linguistics connectionism and perception The Human Semantic Potential describes a connectionist model that learns perceptually grounded semantics for natural language in spatial terms Languages differ in the ways in which they structure space and Regier's aim is to have the model perform its learning task for terms from any natural language The system has so far succeeded in learning spatial terms from English German Russian Japanese and Mixtec The model views simple movies of two dimensional objects moving relative to one another and learns to classify them linguistically in accordance with the spatial system of some natural language The overall goal is to determine which sorts of spatial configurations and events are learnable as the semantics for spatial terms and which are not Ultimately the model and its theoretical underpinnings are a step in the direction of articulating biologically based constraints on the nature of human semantic systems Along the way Regier takes up such substantial issues as the attraction and the liabilities of PDP and structured connectionist modeling the problem of learning without direct negative evidence and the area of linguistic universals which is addressed in the model itself Trained on spatial terms from different languages the model permits observations about the possible bases of linguistic universals and interlanguage variation

Selected Papers from the 7th International Pragmatics Conference: Cognition in language use Enikő Németh T., 2001 An Analysis of the Relevance of Categorization and the Prominence of Basic Level Categories in Written Texts Stefan Ruhnke, 2007-05-22 Seminar paper from the year 2005 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies Linguistics grade 2 3 Ernst Moritz Arndt University of Greifswald Institut für Anglistik Amerikanistik course Discursive Linguistics language English abstract In this seminar paper I want to explain what categorization is and I also want to point out the importance of basic level categories for this process The chapters dealing with these issues are meant to lay the theoretical basis for this seminar paper In the other chapters I intend to discuss the results that a research project developed by Prof Dr Amei Koll Stobbe yielded As it was a project that was based on texts written by several informants the discussion of the results will often refer to the texts which are attached to the paper The hypothesis here is then that we can also show the existence and relevance of categories in written texts Several aspects that linguists regard as relevant for the topic of categorization will be examined using the data of the research project as a basis The most important aspect will be how the basic level category influences language use Other aspects will be discussed in the analysis of the texts in the fourth chapter because it might be useful to illustrate several aspects of lesser importance using the informants texts It also needs to be mentioned that the corpus of data that has been collected is comparatively small texts from 12 informants and that therefore limits regarding the value of the analysis of the data must be considered Some aspects that might be interesting for categorization processes cannot be examined due to the limited number of informants at all Nevertheless it will hopefully be possible to draw some general conclusions about the use of categories and the special cognitive and linguistic prominence of basic level categories
