

Why do things look the way they do?

- Because that's the way they really are! That question is misleading because "how things look" is ill defined in the absence of further theoretical analysis.
- In this class we will look at a somewhat related question:
 - What does the way things appear to us in our conscious experience tell us about how vision and mental imagery works and about the nature of the representations we construct when we see or visualize?
- La Grande Illusion is the belief that we have access to the form of representation we construct in episodes of cognition
- Recent example: Wegner, in The Illusion of Conscious Will, Argues that what we are conscious of is not what causes our voluntary acts
 - ZP: "...the 'illusion' is really that the experience we have of causing certain things to happen explains why it happened"
