Walkin Occams Razor:

On Walking Phil Smith, 2014-04-23 This is not the first walk in the footsteps of W G Sebald whose The Rings of Saturn was an account of his walk round Suffolk 20 years ago But Phil Smith's own walk soon becomes quite as extraordinary as Sebald's and he matches Sebald's erudition originality and humour swathe for swathe On one level On Walking describes an actual lumbering walk from one incongruous B B to the next taking in Dunwich Lowestoft Southwold Covehithe Orford Ness Sutton Hoo Bungay and Rendlesham Forest with their lost villages Cold War testing sites black dogs white deer and alien trails On a second level it sets out a unique kind of walking that the author has been practising for many years and for which he is quietly famous It's a kind of walking that burrows beneath the guidebook and the map looks beyond the shopfront and Tudor facade and feels beneath the blisters and disgruntlement of the everyday Those who try it report that their walking and their whole way of seeing the world is never quite the same again And the Suffolk walk described in this book is an exemplary walk a case study this is exactly how to do it And on a third level On Walking is an intellectual tour de force encompassing Situationism alchemy jouissance dancing geology psychogeography 20th century cinema and old TV performance architecture the nature of grief pilgrimage World War II the Cold War Uzumaki pub conversations synchronicity somatics and the Underchalk
