ABSTRACT

There are various problems that cannot be solved by conventional, hard techniques. Soft computing has emerged as a way of solving these problems, the way humans do. It is a new approach to computing. It is an effective technique for solving problems of classification, prediction, optimization, pattern recognition, image processing, etc. Soft computing techniques include fuzzy logic, genetic algorithms, evolution strategies, artificial neural network, expert systems, and machine learning. These techniques have been used in human-related sciences to solve practical problems related to humans: their activities, health, and social needs. This paper provides an introduction to various applications of soft computing techniques in the human sciences.

INTRODUCTION

Computing is the study of natural and artificial information processes. It has now become a natural science. Today, computing supports online communities, who work through people, who work through software that works through hardware. New ways to view computing affects how we design and build computing systems. As new principles are discovered, computing is evolving and thriving constantly. Figure 1 shows how computing evolved through the four stages of hardware, software, people, and community [1]. Every day more people use computers to do more things in different ways, so engineering, computer science, health, business, psychology, mathematics, and education compete for the computing crown. Academic institutions that compartmentalize computing research into isolated groups deny its multi-disciplinary future.

Computing includes computer science, computer engineering, software engineering, information technology, information science, and information systems. The main functions of computing systems include design, computation, communication, and automation. Computation is the execution of algorithms on a computer. The computer is the tool, computation is the principle [2].

Computation is a process of converting the input of one form to some other desired output form using some actions. Computation was present long before computers were invented, but the remarkable shift to this realization occurred only in the last decade. In the 1940s, computation was seen as a tool for solving problems, cracking codes, analyzing data, managing business processes, and running simulation models.

Computation has established itself as a powerful tool that made formerly intractable analyses tractable. It has become a third pillar of science, joining theory and experiment. Computation has become utterly indispensable in many fields leading to computational biology, computational chemistry, computational physics, computational anatomy, computational electromagnetics, computational fluids, computation
