

International Tourism And Recreation Development Trends In 2022: New Tourism Trends

Stanislav Arlov

DOI: 10.47750/pnr.2022.13.509-525

Abstract

The article considers the revival of international tourism and recreation in 2022 and compares it with the pre-Covid 2019. The main trends in 2022 were also identified, and the threats that the conflict between Russia and Ukraine entailed for the further development of the tourism sector of the world and the European region were clarified. The advantages of investing in the tourism industry are presented, and recommendations are proposed for effectively solving problems in the field of tourist destination marketing.

Keywords — Tourism, forecast, trend, coronavirus pandemic, conflict

1. INTRODUCTION

In today's globalized world, the tourism industry occupies a decisive place in the system of international economic relations and takes the position of a significant factor in economic growth, which contributes to increasing a country's competitiveness on the world stage and solving a number of economic and social issues.

Tourism entered the 21st century as a sector of the economy, which was characterized by stable development and turned into one of the most profitable and dynamic sectors of the global economy. The tourism industry accounted for about 10% of world GDP, 6% of world exports, about 30% of world trade in services, 7% of total world investment, 11% of world consumer spending, with every 10th job associated with this sector [1].

Alongside domestic factors (demand processes, market segmentation, coordination of business, advertising, employees, seasonality, etc.), the development of tourism is influenced by external factors (geopolitical, economic, socio-demographic, as well as scientific and technological), among which it is worth paying attention to geopolitical factors (political upheavals, terrorist attacks, and military conflicts), which affect the dynamics and distribution of tourist flows.

The crisis of the coronavirus pandemic has marked significant changes for everyone, and above all for tourism, which is one of the sectors most affected by the virus. 2020 was the year when international tourism came to an almost complete halt, leaving domestic and local tourism as the only alternative.

The spread of the coronavirus has provoked and exacerbated many threats:

- 1) Threats to health and life. A large number of complications and deaths have escalated due to the coronavirus.
- 2) Economic threats. The pandemic affected small entrepreneurs who were forced to close due to the lockdown, large enterprises lost orders, and entire economic regions suffered losses due to the cessation or restriction of labour migration. Together, economic threats have led to an aggravation of social conflicts.
- 3) Social and legal threats. In the sphere of law, the coronavirus provoked an aggravation of the dilemma between legal regulation and the freedom of citizens. At the same time, it is obvious that the loss of human potential and interpersonal connections, as well as fear that has spread in society can only be stopped by confident, purposeful, and coordinated actions of governments and states.
- 4) Political and ideological threats. Unfortunately, although the coronavirus is a common enemy, it (except some cases) did not give impetus to unite peoples. In some countries, the issues of the pandemic, lockdown, and vaccination have been taken to the political plane and used for political struggle. Politically motivated government decisions to counter COVID-19 have allowed Covid-dissident and anti-vaccine movements to flourish.
