Using Training Aids In Training And Development:

Using Training Aids in Training and Development Leslie Rae, 1998 With the emphasis firmly on the practical side this book examines every aspect of the use of training aids in all types of situations The whole range of training aids is examined here both high tech and tried and true along with full explanations of what they are how to use them to greatest effect why and when to use them and what supportive activities are required Instructor's Guide for Introduction to Leadership Development ,1976 Instructor's Guide for Intermediate Leadership Development ,1984 How to Use Training Aids United States. Agency for International Development. Communications Resources Division, 1961 Naval Training Bulletin ,1953 U.S. Naval Training Bulletin ,1950 Use of Training Aids in the Armed Services Federal Security Agency, US Office of Education (ED), 1945 While the military have enjoyed certain advantages in the development of their training programs they have also operated under certain limitations caused by the necessity of building one of the largest military establishments in the world within 4 years The Services have been faced with the need of adjusting their training programs to constantly changing conditions of warfare and the rapidly developing techniques of war making What has been the fundamental planning approach which the Services have adopted in order to take advantage of the favorable conditions under which they have operated to offset in so far as possible the limiting conditions The training programs of the Services have been based upon three points of approach 1 The utilization of the most modern scientific testing and classification procedures whereby the skills and aptitudes of each serviceman are determined and used as a basis for this assignment to duty and to training 2 The utilization of scientific job and operations analyses as the bases for curriculum building and 3 The utilization of the tools and procedures of experiential learning to the utmost degree as especially exemplified in the widespread use of training aids including audio visual aids The integration and correlation of these three basic procedures are in many ways the most interesting and thought provoking aspect of military training This review of the bases for the training programs of the Services is not to be construed as implying that the Army and Navy have neglected general training for those personal qualities which go to make a good soldier or sailor or for leadership for those in responsible positions The Committee has been interested for the most part however in those programs of job training in which training aids and devices have been principally used A bibliography is included Individual sections contain footnotes Best copy available has been provided Higher Education ,1945 Training Aids for Basic Combat Skills ,2011 There is a need to augment existing Army training approaches to address the differential rates and stages of learning evidenced among Soldiers One way to easily modify existing training approaches is to make adjunct training aids available to trainers for use when appropriate The fact that basic combat skills represent a heterogeneous skill set and are trained to Soldiers with large variability in skills and knowledge suggests that training aids may have a significant impact when used to train basic skills This report describes a training aid development process and provides a brief summary of training aids produced a set of 200 meter zero targets two aids to assist in the marksmanship zero process material to reinforce and practice grid coordinate skill and a video capture and playback system An assessment was conducted for each prototype training aid to determine its training value and to gain feedback for possible revisions Each training aid contributed to enhanced Soldier performance Details on the design development and assessment for each of the prototypes are provided in separate reports Training Aid California.
