Women And Community In Oman:

Women and Community in Oman Christine Eickelman, 1984-12 Before 1970 Oman was one of the more isolated countries on the Arab peninsula. The growth of the oil economy during the seventies however has brought rapid change to the small towns and villages that make up the country. In Women and Community in Oman Christine Eickelman captures the tone and feel of this desert culture on the verge of substantial and probably irreversible change. During 1979 and 1980 she lived in Hamra, an oasis of 2,500 persons and the capital of the Abriyin tribe. Situated on the western edge of the Jabal al Akhdar region of inner Oman, this was formerly one of the most inaccessible areas of the peninsula. Eickelman lived there among the people of Hamra, visiting Omani homes and speaking daily with the men and women, especially the women. The result is a lively and very personal firsthand account of day to day life in the Omani interior. The book looks at the practical changes in the life of the Omanis and at the roles, concerns, and aspirations of the women there. Eickelman explores key concepts in the Omani community and family life from choosing a spouse and negotiating a marriage to giving birth and raising children, from work and status within the community to rituals, mores, and sociability in the neighborhood. Eickelman's study stands as a discriminating and sympathetic view of a sturdily independent culture. This perceptive and informative account will be of lasting importance and interest to Middle East specialists, anthropologists, those concerned with women's studies, and to all persons who want to learn more about the implications of political and social change in the Third World.

Voices from the Community in the Sultanate of Oman, 2000* Arab Family Studies Suad Joseph, 2018-07-10 Family remains the most powerful social idiom and one of the most powerful social structures throughout the Arab world. To engender love of nation among its citizens, national movements portray the nation as a family. To motivate loyalty, political leaders frame themselves as fathers, mothers, brothers, or sisters to their clients, parties, or the citizenry. To stimulate production, economic actors evoke the sense of duty and mutual commitment of family obligation. To sanctify their edicts, clerics wrap religion in the moralities of family, and family in the moralities of religion. Social and political movements, from the most secular to the most religious, pull on the tender strings of family love to recruit and bind their members to each other. To call someone family is to offer them almost the highest possible intimacy, loyalty, rights, reciprocities, and dignity. In recognizing the significance of the concept of family, this state-of-the-art literature review captures the major theories, methods, and case studies carried out on Arab families over the past century. The book offers a country-by-country critical assessment of the available scholarship on Arab families. Sixteen chapters focus on specific countries or groups of countries; seven chapters offer examinations of the literature on key topical issues. Joseph's volume provides an indispensable resource to researchers and students and advances Arab family studies as a critical, independent field of scholarship.
