Anti-Politics Machine James Ferguson,1994-02-01 Development it is generally assumed is good and necessary and in its name the West has intervened implementing all manner of projects in the impoverished regions of the world When these projects fail as they do with astonishing regularity they nonetheless produce a host of regular and unacknowledged effects including the expansion of bureaucratic state power and the translation of the political realities of poverty and powerlessness into technical problems awaiting solution by development agencies and experts It is the political intelligibility of these effects along with the process that produces them that this book seeks to illuminate through a detailed case study of the workings of the development industry in one country Lesotho and in one development project Using an anthropological approach grounded in the work of Foucault James Ferguson analyzes the institutional framework within which such projects are crafted and the nature of development discourse revealing how it is that despite all the expertise that goes into formulating development projects they nonetheless often demonstrate a startling ignorance of the historical and political realities of the locale they are intended to help In a close examination of the attempted implementation of the Thaba Tseka project in Lesotho Ferguson shows how such a misguided approach plays out how in fact the development apparatus in Lesotho acts as an anti politics machine everywhere whisking political realities out of sight and all the while performing almost unnoticed its own pre eminently political operation of strengthening the state presence in the local region James Ferguson is an associate professor of anthropology at the University of California at Irvine

Quaker Women Sandra Stanley Holton,2007 One nineteenth century commentator noted the public character of Quaker women as signalling a new era in female history This study examines such claims through the story of middle class women Friends from among the kinship circle created by the marriage in 1839 of Elizabeth Priestman and the future radical Quaker statesman John Bright The lives discussed here cover a period from the late eighteenth to the early twentieth centuries and include several women Friends active in radical politics and the women s movement in the service of which they were able to mobilise extensive national and international networks They also created and preserved a substantial archive of private papers comprising letters and diaries full of humour and darkness the spiritual and the mundane family confidences and public debate the daily round and affairs of state The discovery of such a collection makes it possible to examine the relationship between the personal and public lives of these women Friends explored through a number of topics including the nature of Quaker domestic and church cultures the significance of kinship and church membership for the building of extensive Quaker networks the relationship between Quaker religious values and women s participation in civil society and radical politics and the women s rights movement There are also fresh perspectives on the political career of John Bright provided by his fond but frank women kin This new study is a must read for all those interested in the history of women religion and politics

Lee,2006-02-14 This book explores the economic coping practices of rural widows in the aftermath of the Cambodian civil war War produces a preponderance of widows often young widows with small children in their care Rural widows must feed their families and educate their children despite rural poverty and the lack of opportunities for women The economics of widowhood is therefore a significant social problem in less developed countries The widows predominant economic plan was to combine rice cultivation with an assortment of microenterprises a rice plus strategy Many widows were unable to grow enough rice on their land to feed their families They filled the hunger gap by raising cash through microenterprises to purchase additional rice Gender work roles were both permeable and persistent allowing a flexible sexual division of labor in the short run but maintaining traditional roles in the long run Most widows called on relatives or exchanged transplanting labor for male plowing services although a few women took up the plow themselves The study also explores widows access to key economic resources such as land credit and education War decimated widows family support networks including the loss of children their social security The study concludes that Cambodia s gender arrangement offered many economic options to widows but also devalued their labor in a cultural structure of inequality Gender poverty and war interacted to reduce widows financial resources accounting for their economic vulnerability
