Gender, Class and Education (Routledge Revivals) Stephen Walker, Len Barton, 2013-11-05 First published in 1983. Gender, Class and Education is a collection of papers that formed presentations at the Westhill Sociology of Education Conference in January 1982 and is the fifth such collection to emerge from the annual conference. The conference theme, Race, Class and Gender, was not only chosen because of its topicality but also to provide a framework for debate between educational researchers and teachers. The papers focus on the reproduction of gender relations through education and provide important insights into how this process works, how it is resisted in schools and colleges, and the possibilities for radical intervention. This volume includes three teaching bibliographies on gender and education which were not presented at the conference but were compiled specially for the book.

Gender, Family and Economy Rae Lesser Blumberg, 1991 The triple overlap refers to the link between gender stratification, the household, and economic variables. In this volume, leading sociologists examine this overlap as a totality, providing theoretical concepts and new research on how the triple overlap works both inside the family and within the broader context of society. Their competing conceptions of the interrelationship of gender, family, and economy are bolstered by empirical papers which raise questions of culture, class, and race within the contexts of both the developed and developing worlds. Six of the articles in this volume were previously published as a Special Issue of Journal of Family Issues.

Gender at the Crossroads of Knowledge Micaela di Leonardo, 2023-09-01 Gender at the Crossroads of Knowledge brings feminist anthropology up to date, highlighting the theoretical sophistication that characterizes recent research. Twelve essays by outstanding scholars, written with the volume's concerns specifically in mind, range across the broadest anthropological terrain, assessing and contributing to feminist work on biological anthropology, primate studies, global economy, new reproductive technologies, ethno-linguistics, race and gender, and more. The editor's introduction not only sets two decades of feminist anthropological work in the multiple contexts of changes in anthropological theory and practice, political and economic developments, and larger intellectual shifts, but also lays out the central insights feminist anthropology has to offer.

The emergence of an active women's movement in contemporary India has created new interest in discovering the historical roots of feminist thought and women's organizations in the colonial period. Professor Southard analyzes the growth of the women's movement in the crucial period between the two World Wars when the Indian nationalist movement gained momentum and women's associations first sought to address women's issues through political action. This regional study focuses on the attempts to gain a hearing for women's issues from the provincial legislature in Bengal whose powers were enhanced by the Montagu Chelmsford reforms. The author examines three women's campaigns for political rights education and social reform legislation: the Bangiya Nari Samaj's quest for woman suffrage, the Bengal Women's Education League's efforts on behalf of extending universal education schemes to girls, and the All Bengal Women's Union's campaign for protection of women and young girls from the prostitution trade. Autobiographies and biographies, records and reports of women's associations, newspapers and journals, and government documents such as the Bengal Legislative Council Proceedings have been used to reconstruct the social origins, goals, political strategies, and historical significance of these women's movements. What emerges is an appreciation of the complexities inherent in alliances between nationalist and feminist movements and the constraints that limited the effectiveness of social reform movements under colonial conditions. Widespread poverty and illiteracy were obstacles that prevented the mobilization of a broad spectrum of the Bengali female population. Overshadowed by the dominant nationalist discourse, it was difficult for women to develop an independent feminist perspective on the problems of Indian society. Activist women who looked to male nationalist leaders for support for their programmes often found that their allies had other priorities in this period of deepening political divisions and increasing violence. Nevertheless, the women's movement made important contributions in articulating the nature and extent of gender discrimination in their society, formulating a feminist philosophy that was compatible with nationalist thought, and arousing public support for social change.
