BUFFALO WOLF Carbyn L, 2003-10-17 Carbyn's tale is an adventurous first person narrative of a scientist in one of the most remote places on earth Wood Buffalo National Park in northwestern Canada studying the only remaining predator prey relationship of wolves and bison As remote as the park is however the long reach of human civilization is everywhere to be found An odd collaboration of ranchers government officials and conservation groups propose that all the bison be killed because they harbor diseases tuberculosis brucellosis and anthrax The threat to cattle is the primary mover but some conservationists have dreams of a pure herd and want to start over Carbyn sees it differently always basing his opinions in science but also realizing that the bison are part of the long cultural heritage of Canada's native peoples He expertly navigates through these emotional debates exploring their twists and turns with insight and compassion
