The Stoneware Monkey - Large Print Edition R. Austin Freeman, 2020-11-30 A novel of two halves this story opens with Dr James Oldfield who finds himself caught one night in a police hunt When he stumbles upon a policeman struck dead by an unknown assailant Oldfield determines to piece together what happened and who Mr Kempster a man who turns up at the scene of the crime may be What unravels is a story of ingenious theft involving diamonds and the remains of an artist's body found in a kiln In the second part Oldfield engages the help of Dr Thorndyke and together they trace the work of the artist and a valuable stoneware monkey that hides an incredible secret In the back streets of London amongst colonies of silk weavers cabinet makers and craftsmen Freeman deftly entwines a cunning story infused with palpable suspense From the father of forensic crime fiction this plot is full of vivid detail The profession of medicine has a good many drawbacks in the way of interrupted meals disturbed nights and long and strenuous working hours But it has its compensations for a doctor's life is seldom a dull life Compared for instance with that of a civil servant or a bank official it abounds in variety of experience and surroundings to say nothing of the intrinsic interest of the work in its professional aspects And then it may happen at any moment that the medical practitioner's duties may lead him into the very heart of a drama or a tragedy or bring him into intimate contact with crime Not that the incident which I am about to describe was in the first place directly connected with my professional duties The initial experience might have befallen anyone But it was my medical status that enlarged and completed that experience It was about nine o'clock on a warm September night that I was cycling at an easy pace along a by road towards the town or village of Newingstead in which I was temporarily domiciled as the locum tenens of a certain Dr Wilson I had been out on an emergency call to a small village about three miles distant and had taken my bicycle instead of the car for the sake of the exercise and having ridden out at the speed that the occasion seemed to demand was now making a leisurely return enjoying the peaceful quiet of the by way and even finding the darkness restful with a good headlight to show the way and a rear light to secure me from collisions from behind At a turn of the lane a few twinkling lights seen dimly through spaces in the hedgerow told me that I was nearing my destination A little reluctant to exchange the quiet of the countryside for the light and bustle of the town I dismounted and leaning my bicycle against a gate brought out my pipe and was just dipping into my pocket for my tobacco pouch when I heard what sounded to me like the call of a police whistle I let go the pouch and put away my pipe as I strained my ears to listen The sound had come from no great distance but I had not been able exactly to locate it The cart track from the gate I knew skirted a small wood from which a footpath joined it and the sound had seemed to come from that direction But the wood was invisible in the darkness though I could judge its position by a group of ricks the nearest of which loomed vaguely out of the murk I had switched off the lamps of my machine and was just considering the expediency of walking up the cart track to explore when the unmistakable shriek of a police whistle rang out considerably nearer than the last and much shorter and was succeeded by the sound of voices apparently angry voices accompanied by obscure noises as of bodies bursting through the undergrowth of the wood from the direction of which the sounds now clearly proceeded On this I climbed over the gate and started up the cart track at a quick pace treading as silently as I could and keeping a bright lookout
