

How We Hear Sound

Have you ever wondered how we hear the sounds around us? The process of hearing is amazing and involves several parts of our body working together. It all starts when sound waves travel through the air and reach our ears.

When sound waves enter the ear, they first hit the ear canal. The ear canal is a small tunnel that directs the sound to the eardrum. The eardrum is like a tiny drum that vibrates when sound waves hit it. These vibrations are very important because they help carry the sound deeper into the ear.

Next, the vibrations from the eardrum are passed on to three small bones inside the ear. These bones are called the ossicles. They are the smallest bones in our body and help to amplify the vibrations, making the sound louder. The ossicles send the vibrations to the cochlea, which is shaped like a spiral.

The cochlea is filled with liquid and tiny hair cells. As the vibrations travel through the liquid, they make the hair cells move. These movements are then turned into electrical signals, which are sent to the brain through the auditory nerve. The brain then interprets these signals as sound, and that's how we hear!

So, when you hear your favourite song or a dog barking, it's because the sound waves have travelled through the air, into your ears, and all the way to your brain. Isn't it amazing how our ears and brains work together to help us hear the world around us?
