

A favored race horse trainer and breeder, commercial pilot, airplane owner, aviation pioneer, industrial designer, writer and world traveler—there are just a few of Beryl Markham's accomplishments. She has the distinction of being the first woman to fly the mail to Africa, the first to cross the game by plane, and the first woman to make her home professionally in Africa. Her famed North Atlantic Flight in 1931 is the only solo East-West crossing ever successfully attempted from England to Japan.

An English girl brought up in British East Africa, her early pleasures and hardships were common to the various tribes and she consequently learned their language, their methods of hunting, some of their customs and their sexual life. Her career as a newspaper reporter with the news would take about her father's saddle and the back of her mother's flying cow as a time when airplanes were scarce in that part of Africa. She has written her autobiography for the first of all seasons—a purely selfish one: "I wanted," she explains, "to bring back a good life lived in a good country so that I could look at them back again." $1.00
