BY JIM GIBBS

Does anyone doubt the important place the little wooden schooners and four-masted ships from Europe and the East Coast held in the settlement and building of the West? The early settlers in California, Oregon and Washington came around the Horn and sailed north from San Francisco. Lumber for houses and industry was brought by sea from the Northwest. And with nothing to guide them but the wind, compass, sextant, stars and a sixth sense, the sturdy little ships struggled through fog and gales, more than half of them foundering.

This is the story of these ships and of the men who sailed them. It is told by a man who understands their age, a man who can write with feeling of ancient seaports, their men and women, of weary helmsmen, of the coast and great stretches of wind in the rigging and channels along above the waves.

"The ship's crew closed in . . . suddenly the big fellow leaped at the captain with a rusty knife . . . before the skipper could strike out with his fists, the knife plunged into his back . . . and he sank to the deck in a pool of blood."

—From "LORD'S" account of an incident aboard the William Hutchinson, 1848

When lumber was brought to the red-wooded hills of every old mining town in Puget Sound, Jim Gibbs watched with the excitement of youth . . . and saw thousands of yards of red go up in orange flames. The work he wanted was a job in driving the pioneer the golden age of schooner, but he wanted all of the ships that navigated West Coast waters. Gibbs is dedicated to the purpose. It is essential to see how and how the schooner developed from his subject of historic ships, rigging, equipment and the men who sailed them that characterized the drifter's age.
