

The 10 Themes of Social Studies: Time, Continuity and Change

When you think of the past, what do you think? Do you think it's not relevant to me, and why does it matter? Maybe you remember an event that was important in your life, or perhaps you haven't given the subject of history much thought except when you are in History class. More than likely, you think about what's going right now is more important than what happened a long time ago or what will happen years from now. That's perfectly understandable! We live in the present, not the past or the future.

Future

History is much more than merely studying the past. History is the study of time, continuity, and change. Sure, your teacher may have you memorize important dates, events, and facts. These are all parts of history, but they don't explain why we study history or why history is important. And yes, anything I need to find about a historical event, I can look it up on the internet in a matter of moments. So why bother to study history?

Look at this picture. What do you think the person is trying to say? _____

Do you agree with the statement? _____

Why or why not? _____

Studying events, memorizing dates, and facts do not explain what history tries to explain. When we look at the past, we are trying to make sense of how human beings view themselves during different periods of time.

How We Study History

Time: In chronological order, periods, and how long or short events last.

Continuity: Individuals live for a short time, but ideas, problems, and institutions can last for several years and through several eras.

Change: Things change. Studying history allows us to see the effects of change on the present and predict what may happen in the future.
