Wild Northern Scenes S. H. Hammond,2004-06-01 All Monday night as I lay tossing upon a bed of pain when fever was coursing through my veins and every pulse went plunging like a steam engine from the gorged heart to every extremity and my brain was like molten lead I heard that terrible bark It was my evil genius my destiny It mingled in every feverish dream became the embodiment of every vision I measured the periods of its recurrence by the clock that stands in the corner of our room I counted the tickings of its silence and I counted the tickings of its continuance Every swing of the pendulum became a distinct period of existence
