

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN STUDENTS' ATTITUDES AND ACADEMIC PERFORMANCE IN STATISTICS COURSE

Chapter 1

THE PROBLEM AND ITS SCOPE

Background of the Study

Statistics plays a crucial role in numerous fields, from scientific research and data analysis to business decision-making and public policy. A strong foundation in statistics is therefore essential for students pursuing a wide range of academic and professional paths. However, many students struggle with the subject, often exhibiting negative attitudes that can significantly impact their learning and performance. In fact, according to Judi et.al (2011), statistics courses are often considered difficult because it involves many fundamental concepts and techniques. Therefore, understanding the relationship between students' attitudes towards statistics and their academic performance is critical to developing effective teaching strategies aimed at improving student success in this vital area.

In as much as teaching and learning statistics is concerned, it is important to assess the correlation of student's attitudes and academic performance in Statistics course. Meanwhile, to ensure the competency of the students in the course, statistics educators should assess students' standing on non-cognitive factors like interest or motivation for further learning, self-concept or confidence regarding statistical skills, willingness to think statistically in everyday situations, and appreciation for the relevance of statistics in their personal and vocational lives Gal, I. & Ginsburg, L. (1994). Hence, understanding the relationship between students' attitudes and academic performance in statistics course in terms of their attitudes such as self-efficacy, interest and feelings towards statistics course, perceived value of statistics and perceived difficulty towards statistics course is crucial to determine the correlation between attitudes and academic performance of students in learning statistics.

Moore (1997) and Mills (2004) suggest that active learning methods should be employed, such as by emphasizing statistical thinking and data processing instead of using theory and formula alone. Students' attitudes towards statistics may play an important role in
