Systemic Vasculitides:

Systemic Vasculitides: Current Status and Perspectives Franco Dammacco, Domenico Ribatti, Angelo

Vacca, 2016-10-13 In spite of their relatively low prevalence systemic vasculitides have been the object of intensive basic and clinical investigations over the last few years. As a consequence, important advancements have been achieved from updated diagnostic and classification criteria and a more rational nomenclature to the recognition of an expanding spectrum of clinical manifestations and potentially devastating complications from the recognition of the viral etiology of conditions such as HCV related cryoglobulinemic vasculitis and HBV associated polyarteritis nodosa to newly named variable vessel vasculitis exemplified by Behçet's disease from single organ vasculitis such as central nervous system vasculitis to the more recently emerging features of the IgG4 related immune mediated diseases that are showing remarkable clinical heterogeneity. In addition, intriguing pathogenetic hypotheses are being reported for certain chronic relapsing vasculitides that are improving our understanding of their biology and basic pathophysiology. New avenues are being explored that will hopefully allow a deeper comprehension of the relationships between certain virus driven vasculitides and lymphoproliferation and possibly lead to the identification of novel biomarkers that may be used to single out patients at an increased risk of relapse. This explosion of knowledge is obviously resulting in state of the art personalized treatments of systemic vasculitides. This book is a collection of reviews on the major vasculitides written by scientists and clinicians with a multi year experience in this field. We hope it will provide the reader with a stimulating container of new advances in scientific knowledge and more rational therapeutic approaches to this fascinating chapter of pathology.

Community series: systemic vasculitis: advances in pathogenesis and therapies, volume II Alexandre Wagner Silva De Souza, Joshua Daniel Ooi, Jun Deng, Poh-Yi Gan, Kelly L. Brown, Stefania Croci, 2026-01-22 This Research Topic is the second volume of the Vasculitis community series Please see volume I here Autoimmune disease occurs when the immune system mistakenly mounts a pro inflammatory response against self In some instances depending on the target self antigen the blood vessels become the site of inflammation This phenomenon is referred to as autoimmune vasculitis It is not a single disorder but rather a group of rare diseases This group of diseases includes the more commonly known diseases such as Kawasaki s disease or granulomatosis with polyangiitis GPA as well as the less common Behcet s disease and the ultra rare Goodpasture s disease Due to the rarity of these diseases research into the etiology of autoimmune vasculitides has been challenging Nevertheless over the last 20 years through multi center collaborations and sheer determination significant advances have been made in this area This includes the development of humanized mouse models of disease to dissect the pathogenesis of diseases as well as successful Phase III clinical trials These advances have opened up this area of research and we are now developing a fundamental understanding of these diseases which we hope will translate into more targeted and effective treatments The goal of this Research topic is to encourage researchers to share their recent advances in their specific area of autoimmune vasculitis Through the collation of articles across the broad range of these diseases it is hoped that the new ideas tools protocols therapeutics etc can then be applied across of variety of diseases Thus collectively advancing the field as a whole Specifically we are seeking new advances developed in a specific autoimmune vasculitide that could be applied to other forms of disease Articles relating to the identification of new molecular or cellular pathways specific to autoimmune vasculitis as well as new experimental or repurposed therapeutics that could specifically treat disease would be relevant We welcome Original Research Review Case Reports Clinical Trial Methods Mini Review Perspective and Systematic Review articles related to but not limited to the following sub topics Advances into disease pathogenesis such as new molecular or cellular pathways that cause inflammation to occur specifically in the blood vessels New or repurposed therapeutics that can restore tolerance and stop disease progression New animal models of autoimmune vasculitis New in vitro methods to measure blood vessel inflammation Up to date reviews in any one autoimmune vasculitic disease or the whole field
