The Principles and Practice of Taijiquan Andrew Townsend, 2021-03-30 This is the final installment of The Principles and Practice of Taijiquan series The overarching concept of this five volume series is that the art of taijiquan is governed by a set of guiding principles in conjunction with numerous practical methods for applying those principles This approach to the study and practice of taijiquan pertains to both the civil and the martial aspects of the art When we consider the martial applications of the art we should strive to remain true to these guiding principles even while focusing on the practical methods of self defense This approach is particularly relevant to the study and practice of the weapons of taijiquan Unlike the approach of most external styles of Chinese martial arts in which the emphasis is on speed and the reliance upon muscular strength to overcome an armed opponent with one's own weapon in taijiquan the practitioner must employ his or her weapon according to the principles laid down by the founders of the five major family styles These principles are clearly explained in the first chapter of this volume as they apply to weapons in general Subsequent chapters investigate the particular principles methods for handling and martial applications of each of the following weapons the single straight sword dan jian the broadsword dao the double broadswords shuang jian and the double straight swords shuang jian the double cudgels shuang ji n and the double hook swords shuang gou the short stick bang the fan shang the cane zhang the long pole chang gan the staff gun the spear qiang the halberd guandao the two section staff chang xiao bang As this list indicates the range of weapons trained and practiced within the five family styles is quite extensive Many taijiquan practitioners may only be familiar with the more common weapons such as the straight sword the broadsword and the spear

The coverage in this volume is intentionally comprehensive in an attempt to present the full complement of taijiquan weaponry. A separate chapter is provided for each of the weapons identified in the above list with the exception of the double straight swords and the double broadswords which are covered in a single chapter and also the double cudgels and the double hook swords which are likewise addressed in a single chapter. For each weapon there are specific sections describing the design and components of the weapon, exploring the history and derivation of the weapon, the methods for handling and wielding the weapon, the classically designated techniques for applying the weapon, and multiple examples illustrating the martial applications of the weapon. Hopefully this level of detail will serve to further the understanding of those individuals who currently practice one or more weapons of the art. For novice practitioners seeking to take up their first weapon or for those who want to add another weapon to their arsenal, this survey should prove an invaluable tool in assisting them with making such a selection.

The Tai Chi Cane, Sifu Bob, 2019-02-05. A Golden Flower Internal Arts Series volume on the Tai Chi Cane. The cane is not an original Tai Chi Chuan weapon. As Tai Chi Chuan grew, many weapons were adapted to the methods and theories of Tai Chi Chuan. The essence of Tai Chi Chuan, with the workings of the footwork and the body movements, are in this form. Therefore, we hope that this will be of value in the reader's progress in the internal arts. This is a basic book to provide the basics of using a cane or similar weapon. In the meantime, look for the other Internal Arts Series volumes on Amazon.

The Complete Taiji Dao, Zhang Yun, 2009-06-23. The dao, a single-edged sword with a curved blade, is one of the most popular weapons in traditional Chinese martial arts. The art of Taiji Dao is a set of skills for using the dao, derived from the popular martial art Taijiquan. One of the most important aspects of Taijiquan practice is weapons training, eagerly pursued by students who have become adept in the basic skills of the art. The Complete Taiji Dao introduces the principles and practice of Taiji Dao and provides illustrated discussions of the history of Chinese swords. The book covers the history and features of the dao, the Taiji principles from which Taiji Dao practice derives the basic skills and techniques of the art, detailed descriptions and photographs of the traditional Taiji Dao form and Taiji Dao fighting principles and training methods. Broad in scope and detailed in its presentation of the principles and practice of Taiji Dao, The Complete Taiji Dao represents a significant contribution to the field of traditional Chinese weapons practice.
