

...ir study, the researchers recruited 182 participants in an evening MBA course at a U.S. university and administered a survey. Participants worked at least 30 hours per week across a range of industries, including healthcare and for the government. The participants ranged in age from 22 to 65 years old, and all but four were married or in a long-term relationship.

Researchers asked the participants to fill out surveys over four consecutive days, including Friday and Saturday counting as one day. Questions included how often they used mobile work communications during non-work time that day, as well as how often they had with their significant other.

Dr. Kelly S. Selkin of Lehigh University, who co-authored the study, said that the study's main objective was to investigate the connection to carry on the working day is an "invisible stressor" that can impact their satisfaction with it.

Passage 2

Many of us struggle to part with treasured belongings. Evans felt compelled to hang on to just about everything, including her hallway and living room were filled with magazines. Her bedroom, meanwhile, was so cluttered that recently, she had to sleep on the sofa in the living room to some degree. But, like many, she didn't think she had a hoarding disorder, thought to affect an estimated 6% of the population. In fact, hoarding is a recognized mental health disorder in its own right by the World Health Organization. But last month, Evans decided to try something, such as clothes, new furniture, and other belongings, she didn't think she needed. Northampton
