The Magic Ring; a Romance. From the German, Etc Friedrich Heinrich Karl Freiherr de La Motte-Fouqué, 1825 The Magic Ring: A Romance (Complete) Friedrich de la Motte Fouque, 2020-09-28 There were indeed many horses from which had alighted a number of well dressed squires or serving men at arms who were already busily employed in pitching on the meadow handsome ornamental tents coloured red blue green and yellow Then there came a most beautiful lady with a train of female attendants all on horseback and a knight in full armour was waiting to receive her by whom she was lifted from her white palfrey with great respect and attention Thereafter it was a pleasure to see how the lady and knight walked backwards and forwards for pastime on the green level plain the former dressed in sky blue velvet with a border of rich gold embroidery the latter in a black coat of mail yet finely burnished and inlaid with many emblematic devices in bright silver His appearance altogether was not a little strange and mysterious the fashion of his accoutrements being such as Bertha and Otto had till now never beheld His demeanour though courteous was grave and solemn yet as he wore no helmet they perceived that he was a young man of very agreeable and sprightly features The two strangers in the course of their walk came very near the spot where Otto and Bertha were stationed who of course greeted them with a respectful salutation The lady returned this compliment and her looks seemed irresistibly attracted by the tall graceful figures of the young people She made a signal that they should approach nearer and began a conversation from which she learned at once the whole history of their peaceful regular and happy life Their narrative indeed was so short and simple and had so few adventures that more words would have been superfluous With a melancholy smile then the lady turned to her companion Count Archibald said she if we were called on to narrate our history could the task have been so easily accomplished And yet said she turning to the young couple it seems to me as if I had incurred a debt which I must compensate by telling you the strange events of my pilgrimage You will no doubt find some entertainment therein and methinks it is only your modesty and polite behaviour that prevent you from asking who we are and what has brought us hither But since you have spoken so kindly and confidently to me I should be very ungrateful if I wrapt myself any longer under the veil of mystery Come then with us With these words Otto and Bertha were led by the stranger into one of the tents which were by this time already spread The lady seated herself on a sofa and made them take their places beside her Count Archibald went out to make divers arrangements as to his little camp and in a few minutes the lady began the following narration My name is Gabrielle and I am descended from the ancient race of Portamour Being from my earliest infancy an orphan I yet frequently heard from the people to whom I was given in charge that I ought to be one of the noblest and richest ladies in all France were it not for the absence of a certain ring which a countess of the Norman family Montfaucon had contrived to get into her possession and which had been inherited by her daughter who was about the same age with myself So the ring was constantly held out to me as the most desirable and important of all worldly possessions whether waking or asleep I thought and dreamed but of this alone knowing that this wonderful gem would not only convey to me some extensive territories but what was far more important in my estimation would bring along with it the knowledge of several magical spells and even a commanding influence over the world of spirits Judge what were my feelings when one evening at the King s court where I had just then made my first appearance a young lady was introduced by name Blanche fleur de Montfaucon on whose beautiful hand for she was indeed very beautiful I directly recognized the ring which from the frequent descriptions that I had heard of it was perfectly known to me To get this treasure into my own possession was for the first time an easy task for during the festival we were to pass the night in the same chamber and Blanche fleur having carelessly taken it from her finger I seized on my own family property as soon as she fell asleep Next morning she scarcely seemed to regret her loss but after searching for a few moments in vain she went away gayly to attend the tournament which had just then begun Thither I followed her and soon after we had taken our places a graceful and warlike knight rode up towards her who as I understand was her brother Sir Folko de Montfaucon His bright falconlike eyes had in a moment observed the absence of the ring on her finger and its appearance on mine After having interchanged a few words with his sister he came to me with looks respectful indeed but grave and determined then pointing his lance to the ground Lady said he may it please you to select a champion with whom I may try my fortune in the lists and from whom I may win back that ring which now shines on your beautiful hand but which belongs to my sister Blanche fleur Of course I did according as he desired but in consequence of this agreement one of the most renowned and skilful knights in France whom I had chosen for my defender was thrown prostrate on the sand so quickly and decisively that according to the rules of the combat I had no alternative left but must immediately restore to him the family jewel which I had possessed for so short a while to be given back to his admired sister Blanche fleur I wept bitterly and retired to my chamber where I would not listen to the messages of my friends and youthful companions who wished me to join with them in the amusements appointed for that afternoon and evening I spoke harshly too with my attendant when she brought into the room a finely made fishing rod inlaid with mother of pearl with a golden line and silver hook which I was to have used on the following day at a gay party on the water But of what consequence were to me such diversions now that I had lost my ring The girl discontentedly set the fishing rod in the window corner and as I would not notice her left me alone to weep Towards evening I became more tranquil and the loud laughing of my young companions who were playing at ball in the garden induced me at last to look through the window Then I observed that Blanche fleur feeling that her ring was inconvenient took it from her finger laid it on a moss covered seat under my window and thoughtlessly ran back to her game With a beating heart and anxious wishes I drew open the lattice upon which motion the fishing rod as if offering its services fell into my arms I immediately made a trial found that the golden line reached down to the ring which on the first touch as if I had been assisted by magic attached itself to the hook and was drawn up and received by me with a thousand kisses
