A Human Restoration Giuseppina Scavuzzo, Gianfranco Guaragna, Sergio Pratali Maffei, 2021-06-21 Beginning with the double meaning of the Italian verb riparare to protect and to restore we compare architecture which has always had the task of building shelter but which today also proposes to restore existing buildings and the urban fabric with psychiatry which in its history has claimed to repair the mind of the insane protecting both the afflicted and society itself through internment The comparison between architecture and psychiatry is appropriate if one is planning the repurposing of a former mental hospital and the comparison becomes incredibly pertinent if the asylum in question is the one where in 1961 the battle for the rights of people with mental disorders was born leading to the Basaglia Law of 1978 which banished an architectural typology that of the psychiatric hospital that had become the symbol of the denial of those rights The story of this hospital now called Basaglia Park is marginal in every sense one of its edges coincides with the state border and at the same time it is central to a troubled history involving the intersection of cultures identities and languages making it emblematic in light of contemporary events With all its complexity this place has been proposed as the subject of knowledgeable reflection and different design practices
