Virginia Will Records:

Virginia's Lost Wills Wesley E. Pippenger, 2018-12-07 For this study a lost record is considered in two ways first as an item from a location where court records have been destroyed and second for records that are found in unexpected places oftentimes far from their point of origin One might consider this work about wills and their whereabouts Also abstracts or transcripts of wills have been noted when found published in periodicals Numerous sources have been consulted and these are listed under Abbreviations Many wills may be found digitized and accessed online at the Library of Virginia Wills that are identified from chancery suits are typically not included if they originate from the same county as the court copy of a will Of the wills that have been copied from chancery causes a single suit reference is normally given however the will may be found in multiple suits Many previous to 1800 are included In using the burned record county database at the Library of Virginia not all items show the specific source for the copy so the reference given here is merely BRCD Duplicate entries have been removed from the subject work which focuses on data previous to 1800 University of Virginia Record ,1919

Virginia's Attitude Toward Slavery and Secession Beverley Bland Munford, 1909 This work is designed as a contribution to the volume of information from which the historian of the future will be able to prepare an impartial and comprehensive narrative of the American Civil War or to speak more accurately The American War of Secession No attempt has been made to present the causes which precipitated the secession of the Cotton States nor the states which subsequently adopted the same policy except Virginia Even in regard to that commonwealth the effort has been limited to the consideration of two features prominent in the public mind as constituting the most potent factors in determining her action namely devotion to slavery and hostility to the Union That the people of Virginia were moved to secession by a selfish desire to extend or maintain the institution of slavery or from hostility to the Union are propositions seemingly at variance with their whole history and the interests which might naturally have controlled them in the hour of separation Virginia Colonial
