Tall and burly with features and skin hardened by exposure to the sun and winds of many climates he looked like a man ready to face all hardships equal to any emergency Already one seemed to see the clothes and habits of civilization falling away from him the former to be replaced by the stern unlovely outfit of the war correspondent who plays the game They crowded round him in the club smoking room for these were his last few minutes They had dined him toasted him and the club loving cup had been drained to his success and his safe return For Lovell was a popular member of this very Bohemian gathering and he was going to the Far East at a few hours notice to represent one of the greatest of English dailies A pale slight young man who stood at this right hand was speaking His name was Walter Aynesworth and he was a writer of short stories a novelist in embryo What I envy you most Lovell he declared is your escape from the deadly routine of our day by day life Here in London it seems to me that we live the life of automatons We lunch we dine we amuse or we bore ourselves and we sleep and all the rest of the world does the same Passion we have outgrown emotion we have destroyed by analysis The storms which shake humanity break over other countries What is there left to us of life Civilization ministers too easily to our needs existence has become a habit No wonder that we are a tired race Life is the same the world over another man remarked With every forward step in civilization life must become more mechanical London is no worse than Paris or Paris than Tokyo Aynesworth shook his head I don't agree with you he replied It is the same more or less with all European countries but the Saxon temperament

with its mixture of philosophy and philistinism more than any other gravitates towards the life mechanical Existence here has become fossilized We wear a mask upon our faces we carry a gauge for our emotions Lovell is going where the one great force of primitive life remains He is going to see war He is going to breathe an atmosphere hot with naked passion he is going to rub shoulders with men who walk hand in hand with death That is the sort of tonic we all want to remind us that we are human beings with blood in our veins and not sawdust-stuffed dolls Then Lovell broke silence He took his pipe from his mouth and he addressed Aynesworth The malefactor Edward Phillips Oppenheim, 1907 The Bookman, 1907
