To complete this template, replace the bracketed text with your responses.

Part One: Choose the Creative Works

1. [I have chosen to focus on mental health for this project. Two creative works related to this topic are the 2015 movie "Inside Out" and the 1992 song "Everybody Hurts" by R.E.M. The film connects visual arts to the topic, and the song connects performing arts.]
2. [When understanding mental health, movies and songs are an excellent way to communicate with different and diverse groups of people. The movie "Inside Out", which follows the mental development of a pre-teenage girl, is largely relatable to almost anyone. You don't have to relate to the main character directly; you could have a sister, friend, cousin, and/or niece that you may come to understand more after watching the film. Even males, older people, and different cultures will find a way to empathize with Riley's mental hardships and formation of identity. The song "Everybody Hurts" states plainly, in multiple lines, about mental health, know that you're not alone, hold on even when you feel like letting go, and sometimes you're going to hurt as everyone does. R.E.M. (1992) reminds us, being the influential and loved band they are, they reach many people spanning decades, and listening to them speak on a sensitive topic with their art you can understand what it means to be in a negative mental state, which is part of the ups and downs of mental health.]
3. [There are many diverse perspectives throughout the creative works that add to the value and impact they may have on different cultures and identities. Depending on your culture you may view certain themes and games as foreign and unrelatable. Riley in the movie "Inside Out" was a hockey player and was taken from her home team. If you are not familiar with hockey or sports at all you would not understand the feeling of losing this specifically, on the other side, playing sports or being a fan, you may relate personally. Especially if sports are part of your culture. This kind of change also has a big effect on developing minds, which regardless of your relation to hockey, you learn about. In this film, identifying directly with any sort of mental illness is a major diverse perspective on the topic of mental health. Everyone at some point is going to face hardships and hurt, the main point of "Everybody Hurts" by R.E.M. (1992). However, you may only listen to this music if you are experiencing negative mental health. Someone who is mentally well could learn about mental health with the song but wouldn't understand the need and comfort of such works. Diverse perspectives allow you to put yourself in others' shoes and understand your society more deeply. The presence of diverse perspectives in the arts also creates safe spaces for under-recognized groups and cultures, beyond stereotypes. This itself can influence one's mental health and identity. When discussing mental health, like in the movie "Inside Out" and the song "Everybody Hurts", it's important to be diverse when reaching audiences to maximize the positive reaction of an essential but sensitive topic.]
4. [You could assume that to achieve great mental health, you need to eliminate all other negative emotions, such as anger, sadness, fear, and disgust. However, the film "Inside Out" supports the idea that you must let each emotion out when necessary to be healthy and balanced. People also often assume that mental illnesses are rare. The song "Everybody Hurts" is meant to bring the commonality of mental illness to light, spread awareness, and offer comfort. Fighting the other possible bias and assumption that all mentally ill or depressed are considered "crazy," and not normal.]
