6.1 INTRODUCTION

The concept of power in relation to national and international politics is regarded as the most significant area of basic research in political science. The idea of power has recently acquired importance in a special way in the realm of political theory. The meaning of politics has changed from one of being 'study of state and government' to that of being a 'study of power'. Curtis rightly says, 'the study of politics is concerned with the description and analysis of the manner in which power is obtained, exercised and controlled, the purpose for which it is used, the manner in which decisions are made, the factors which influence the making of those decisions, and the context in which those decisions take place. In the words of O. P. Gauba, 'power transcends the realm of formal institutions to focus on the real motives and objectives of human beings which lie behind all political activity and institution building.'
