Social Capital, Social Support, and Quality of Life Among Long-term Breast Cancer Survivors Dana M. Petersen,2008

The Healing Web Marc Pilisuk,Susan Hillier Parks,1986 A wide ranging multidisciplinary work showing how the breakdown of social support networks affects the physical psychological health of the individual society as a whole

Understanding Social Networks Charles Kadushin,2012-01-04 Understanding Social Networks explains the big ideas that underlie social networks covering fundamental concepts then discussing networks and their core themes in increasing order of complexity

Understanding Social Networks Lambert Maguire,1983 The book is a readable guide to networking theory research and practice Maguire discusses contemporary evidence that social support networks generally made up of nonprofessionals can substitute for or compliment professional care The author has an excellent grasp of the huge academic literature on this subject combined with an easy to follow style British Journal of Social Work Volume 14 1984

The Impact of Social Networks and Social Support on Mental Disorders and Mortality Ziggi Ivan Santini,2016 INTRODUCTION There is conflicting evidence regarding the role of social support networks in health and wellbeing and more research is needed to address the lack of information The objective of this project is to categorize

key indicators of social support and social networks and further to determine the impact of such indicators on mental disorder and mortality

METHODS This project will include three research articles paper I is a review of the literature which involves an investigation into the evidence on associations between social support networks and depression in the general population

systematic literature review

Paper II is an original research paper that involves an examination of how social network integration predicts all cause mortality among older adults in six Latin American countries India and China

prospective analysis

Finally paper III is an original research paper involving an investigation into relationship quality positive and negative aspects of social support and social networks with depression anxiety and suicidal ideation in a nationally representative sample of older Irish adults in intimate relationships

cross sectional analysis

RESULTS I A number of key indicators of social support and social networks were identified to be associated with depression

Generally studies have found protective effects of perceived social support and large diverse social networks against depression in the general population

II For older adults in developing countries survival time is significantly reduced in individuals embedded in restricted social networks

III For older Irish adults in intimate relationships we found that worse relationship quality with the spouse is positively associated with depression anxiety and suicidal ideation and that restricted social network integration is positively associated with depression

CONCLUSION A number of recommendations have been made for future research in order to make a more comprehensive assessment of the role of social support networks in relation to mental health outcomes

Further being embedded in good social support networks is negatively associated with mortality and also a number of outcomes on mental disorder among older adults in the general population

Social care and public mental health interventions may be enhanced by tailoring interventions to improve the quantity and quality of social support networks in order to promote population mental health and health status

Implications for health research policy and future directions
