The Interplay between Urban Development, Vulnerability, and Risk Management Ebru A. Gencer, 2013-06-19 Natural disasters are increasingly affecting the world taking lives unexpectedly and leaving many others injured and homeless Moreover disasters disrupt local national and even global economies instantly changing the direction of development In the first half of 2011 alone 108 natural disasters occurred killing over 23 thousand people affecting nearly 44 million others and causing more than 253 billion US dollars of economic damages CRED 2011 1 Large urban settlements have become increasingly vulnerable to the impacts of natural disasters The concentration of substandard infrastructure and housing material assets and inherent socio economic inequalities increase vulnerability to disasters in large urban areas especially in developing countries The size number functions and geographical distribution of large and megacities create a special concern for disaster risk Good urban management practices can be a powerful catalyst for reducing losses from natural disasters while simultaneously helping to develop a sustainable environment Yet the existing situation indicates that sustainable planning and risk management measures are not taken into consideration or may not be put into practice for a variety of financial political and social reasons This book argues that on one hand socio economic disparities resulting from unsustainable urban development can increase vulnerability to natural hazards and on the other hand when paired with natural hazards this increased vulnerability can negatively affect urban areas resulting in further inequality This book will showcase this argument with theoretical reviews and quantitative analyses on the interplay between sustainable development and disaster vulnerability as well as an in depth case study of the role of urban planning and risk management practices in creating the socio economic and spatial vulnerabilities and predicted earthquake risk in the megacity of Istanbul

Civil Defense Implications of Current and Future Urban Configurations Henry L. Woltman, E. C. Goodrow, 1963 This report examines the possibilities of vulnerability reduction through long term changes in urban form and structure in the light of projected trends in economic and social forces affecting future urban development Urban decentralization is likely to continue in the future and technological change may permit deliberate acceleration of this trend toward sprawling urban regions Various conceptual and empirical urban forms are reducible to a few basic types The vulnerability characteristics of the different forms are mixed but the galaxy and dispersed sheet forms are generally best suited to civil defense purposes These are similar to the forms that future urban regions are expected to take A variant of the dispersed sheet form is considered the most advantageous it would provide compact urban communities separated by extensive open spaces devoted to nonurban land uses within future metropolitan areas In addition efforts to increase the hardness of urban structures are desirable An increased proportion of high hardness structural types should be encouraged in the building mix This increase should take the form mainly of high hardness residential structures dispersed singly or in clusters throughout residential areas Indirect methods are considered by which progress toward these objectives might be assisted through various ongoing Federal and state governmental activities Author
