Analysis of Impact of Urbanization on Environmental Quality in China

Houkai Wei,Yan Zhang,2020 As a developing country with great regional disparities China s rapid urbanization has had important impacts on environmental quality In this study the drivers mechanisms effects DME model is built which shows how element agglomeration scale growth knowledge accumulation and industry evolution drive the environmental system to change during the urbanization process An econometric regression model using provincial panel data is further constructed to empirically analyze the impacts of urbanization on environmental quality It is shown that during the process of urbanization in China element agglomeration and knowledge accumulation help to improve environmental quality but with weak positive effect while growing urban scale and industrial structure have obvious negative effects on environmental quality The inverted U shape up first and then down change in the environmental quality during China s urbanization process is obvious It is critical that China concentrates on the transformations of both city development paths and urbanization models to reduce resource and environmental costs as much as possible
