

The politics of urban-rural relations: land use conversion in the Philippines

Philip F. Kelly

SUMMARY: By examining the process of land use conversion in Manila's extended metropolitan region, this paper suggests that rural-urban relations must be seen as intensely political. The conversion of rice land into industrial, residential and recreational uses represents a political process in two senses: first, policy choices are made relating to the use of land that reflect a particular set of developmental priorities; and second, the facilitation of conversion involves the use of political power relations to circumvent certain regulations. These points are made at three different, but interconnected, levels: at the national level of policy formulation; at the local level of policy implementation and regulation; and at the personal level of everyday power relations in rural areas. The paper draws upon fieldwork in the rapidly urbanizing province of Cavite to the south of Metropolitan Manila.

Philip Kelly recently completed a Ph.D in Geography at the University of British Columbia in Canada. He is now lecturer in Southeast Asian Studies at the National University of Singapore. His current research examines the economic and political dimensions of globalization in Southeast Asia, focusing on the labour process in sites of foreign direct investment in the Philippines, Indonesia and Malaysia.

I. INTRODUCTION

URBAN-RURAL RELATIONS have conventionally been understood in terms of social and economic interactions and linkages between two distinct modes of production and reproduction.<sup>12</sup> These relationships might be in the form of household livelihood strategies that straddle the two sectors;<sup>13</sup> flows of commodities, capital and migrants; or, more recently, in new forms of "urbanization" that embody elements of both the urban and the rural.<sup>14</sup> While each of these approaches provides useful insights, they essentially overlook the politics of rural-urban relations both in terms of the policy choices that are made relating to the use of land and with regard to the political processes (broadly conceived) that facilitate land conversion.

This paper examines some of the developmental priorities and political processes involved in land conversion in the Philippines, and the region around Manila in particular (see Maps 1 and 2). It is in the agricultural provinces of Manila's extended metropolitan region that some of the country's most productive farmlands also form the core region of an industrializing and glo-

Identifying the Turning Point of the Urban-Rural Relationship Liangliang Gao, Jiao Yan, Yue Du, 2018

The urban and rural dual structure is a defining characteristic of the social and economic development process in China. With rapid urbanization, remarkable development of agriculture and rural modernization, the relationship between urban and rural areas is undergoing significant changes in China. Using macro data, we find that the relationship between urban and rural areas started to change in 2010. The transition has mainly been reflected in three dimensions: agriculture, rural areas, and farmers. First, agricultural versatility has gradually increased, and the number of participants in leisure agriculture and rural tourism has grown rapidly since 2010. Second, the rural employment rate has risen gradually, and the share of rural employees in the tertiary sector has grown markedly. Third, the urban-rural income ratio and consumption ratio have begun to decrease, and the levels of consumption of domestic tourism by urban and rural residents are becoming small.

Contemporary Studies on Modern Chinese History Zeng Yeying, 2021-03-15

The study of modern Chinese history has developed rapidly in recent decades and has seen increased exploration of new topics and innovative approaches. Resulting from a special issue of Modern Chinese History Studies, this set is devoted to showcasing the healthy development of Chinese modern history studies and has already been revised twice in the original language. This three-volume set exhibits major achievements on the study of modern Chinese history and shows how the role of history was in debate, transformation, and re-evaluation throughout this tortuous yet prosperous period. Articles on 23 different topics are collected from over 30 prominent historians in order to represent their insights on the developmental paths of Chinese historical studies. Drawing on a large number of case studies of critical historical events that contribute to the establishment of the People's Republic of China, this set offers a panoramic view on the studies of modern Chinese history. In addition, it incorporates more pioneering topics such as intellectual history, cultural history, and translations of overseas studies on contemporary Chinese history. This set will be a valuable reference for scholars and students of Chinese history.
