related to students change in writing after they attended a college writing center Five Mississippi colleges and universities participated in the study The study began with 110 students however only 78 students submitted two essays during the semester Of those 34 reported that they attended the writing center 28 reported that they did not attend the writing center and 16 did not report attendance English instructors at each college selected one of their English composition classes for the study and during the semester the instructors submitted unmarked copies of their students first essay and unmarked copies of a later essay to the researcher Upon receipt of the students papers the researcher copied and coded all of the papers removing all identifying information A panel of three trained raters individually graded all of the students unmarked papers using a first year composition rubric obtained from the University of South Florida which included the four criteria focus evidence organization and style Using the Cronbach s alpha of .7 the researcher determined interrater reliability and was able to average the scores of the raters for each of the student s essays The results indicated that the majority of the student participants did not attend their college s writing center during the semester Additionally the majority of those who did attend only attended one time However of the 8 students who attended their writing center at least 4 times their scores on the 4 criteria improved on most of the criteria with only two students showing a decline on any criteria The remainder showed either no change or an improvement The results of this study suggest that a change in student writing performance occurs after multiple visits and could be useful to higher education administrators especially writing center directors who may seek to replicate the study within their own centers Page ii

Laboratory Neal Lerner, 2009-07-09 The Idea of a Writing Laboratory is a book about possibilities about teaching and learning to write in ways that can transform both teachers and students Author Neal Lerner explores higher education's rich history of writing instruction in classrooms writing centers and science laboratories By tracing the roots of writing and science educators recognition that the method of the lab hands on student activity is essential to learning Lerner offers the hope that the idea of a writing laboratory will be fully realized more than a century after both fields began the experiment Beginning in the late nineteenth century writing instructors and science teachers recognized that mass instruction was inadequate for a burgeoning non traditional student population and that experimental or laboratory methods could prove to be more effective Lerner traces the history of writing instruction via laboratory methods and examines its successes and failures through case studies of individual programs and larger reform initiatives Contrasting the University of Minnesota General College Writing Laboratory with the Dartmouth College Writing Clinic for example Lerner offers a cautionary tale of the fine line between experimenting with teaching students to write and curing the students of the disease of bad writing The history of writing within science education also wends its way through Lerner's engaging work presenting the pedagogical origins of laboratory methods to offer educators in science in addition to those in writing studies possibilities for long sought after reform The Idea of a Writing Laboratory compels readers and writers to don those white coats and safety glasses and discover what works and asserts that teaching writing as an experiment in what is possible as a way of offering meaning making opportunities for students no matter the subject matter is an endeavor worth the struggle Establishing and Implementing a Writing Center on the College Level Barbara Jean Hunt, 1985 Research Anthology on Doctoral
