Tribal Cultural Resources Management: A Case Study of the Fernandei o Tataviam Band of Mission Indians Kimia Fatehi, 2017 This thesis is a case study of the Fernandei o Tataviam Band of Mission Indians Tribe multifaceted practice of Tribal Cultural Resources Management TCRM

as it relates to projects subject to the California Environmental Quality Act CEQA Tracing the Tribe s journey to weave traditional stewardship principles into the contemporary fabric of TCRM this thesis investigates how the Tribe utilizes TCRM to express assert and preserve its inherent sovereignty over the land and its resources With a jurisdiction encompassing northern Los Angeles County the Tribe is confronted with numerous land altering activities that require strenuous review to eliminate potential adverse impacts to invaluable tribal cultural resources Yet there remains no legislation in place to ensure that the Tribe is compensated for the professional consultation services assessments and or expertise it provides in this effort Lack of funding is one of four key disruptions to productive TCRM addressed in this research which also presents the Tribe s partial solutions to them This thesis then demonstrates how the Tribe s proactive response to these impediments has removed a fraction of the financial burden of consultation off the Tribe and helped support its TCRM department become more self sufficient while interrogating the current policies that have necessitated such actions

American Indian Cultural Resources Gladine G. Ritter,1991 Enhancing Cultural Resources Management and Improving Tribal Involvement in the NEPA Process Through the Development of a Tribal Environmental Policy Act Kathleen M. Sloan,2008 This dissertation presents an analysis of the historic preservation framework on tribal cultural resources management CRM It examines some of the challenges this framework poses to tribal governments working on cultural resources protection efforts within a compliance framework An examination of five major laws that regulate the practice of CRM identifies some of the potential strengths and weaknesses of each law for meeting tribal CRM goals A discussion of the background of CRM and tribal involvement in CRM efforts is presented in the context of cultural and environmental resources management An examination of environmental law specifically the National Environmental Policy Act NEPA is examined for its potential to strengthen tribal involvement in NEPA reviews and compliance efforts that impact tribal lands and resources A discussion of Tribal Environmental Policy Acts their origin history and potential to assist tribal efforts and improve tribal participation and impact analysis in NEPA reviews is presented in the context of cultural resources management Finally the potential of a TEPA and TEPA development to assist tribal government efforts in review assessment and protection of cultural resources is presented as an additional tool for Tribal CRM that looks beyond historic preservation and includes a holistic treatment of environmental resources as cultural resources
