simultaneously inhabiting digital and material spaces i.e. composite spaces in the context of the growing ubiquitousness of digital media and culture. Bringing together a range of key cinematic texts, the book examines how these films represent composite space by depicting, often subtly and without explicit reference to technology, what it feels like to live in a world of ubiquitous digital media. The book explores composite spaces through the striking use of elements like colour, symbolic graphics and music, and covers topics like music as mediator between levels of experience, perception in visionary films such as Sucker Punch (2011) and Spring Breakers (2012), digital colour as an interface in films including Under the Skin (2013), the integration of digital graphical elements drawn from game spaces into material spaces in films such as Scott Pilgrim vs The World (2010) and Nerve (2016), and films that take place on a computer screen including 2020's widely discussed Zoom-produced pandemic horror film Host. Through the close analysis of these films, the book offers fresh perspectives on conceptual issues of embodiment, digital agency and subjectivity. This book is a valuable resource for advanced undergraduates, postgraduates and scholars in the fields of film studies, digital aesthetics and film theory, digital culture and digital media.

Adventure, 1920.

The Mind Game Norman Spinrad, 2013-06-17. A down-on-his-luck Hollywood director's actress wife is taken over by a Scientology-like mind game cult called Transformationalism. She disappears into the bowels of Transformationalism. He's determined to rescue her to the point where he pretends to be taken over too. Is he or isn't he? As he delves deeper and deeper, or higher and higher, depending on what he believes, he's no longer sure of himself. A novel about the power of cults, show biz and cults, and just maybe the nature of reality, assuming there is one. One of the real such cults took a certain offense with the author; there was a mysterious burglary with nothing of value taken, a few other such mind games.
