begins before feedback ever reaches reports and how to move from journey map thinking toward the language of system dynamics A special emphasis is on what governance looks like when algorithms build the experience upstream before an individual customer journey or feedback event even exists CX is Broken is for leaders product owners developers and strategists who need a reality based model of how experience is formed in algorithmic environments and how to move from the simulation of control back to a system that can actually be controlled It provides the language and structure to see system state delays and constraints so that control does not rely on after the fact explanations but on what can be measured and adjusted at the right timescale
