Being a Paper Presented in the 1st International Multinational Conference of the Faculty of Education, Abdulkadir Kure University, Minna with the theme: "Building Sustainable Communities through Transformative Education, AI-Driven Innovation and Green Economic Practices", 8th-11th July, 2025

Abstract

Sub-national strategic plans emphasize the sustainable greening of urban roads for aesthetic enhancement, carbon purification, climate change mitigation, and socio-economic impacts. However, inconsistent urban expressway green policy implementation by successive governments in Niger State - particularly concerning the expressway green corridors in Minna, the state capital - could stifle sustainable growth and development of micro and small horticultural enterprises and limit their socio-economic potentials. Therefore, this study investigates the implications of greening, de-greening/un-greening, and re-greening policies of Muazu Babangida Aliyu, Abubakar Sani Bello, and Mohammed Umar Bago Administrations, respectively on horticulture business activities in Minna. Adopting a qualitative research design and utilizing interviews, data were analyzed using thematic method aided by Excel and ChatGpt AI tools. Findings reveal that successive governments' expressway green policy implementations have had the same negative effects on the horticulture business enterprises despite their potentials to deliver basic modern horticultural products and services. However, greening and re-greening policies provided limited support to the growth of horticultural enterprises compare to the de-greening and un-greening policies. The study recommends consistent adherence to the state's urban greening strategy by the elected governments. Also, it recommends that Niger State government give priority to local horticulture enterprises in awarding contract for the development and maintenance of green plants on the expressways. Both government and local horticulturists should adapt soil-compatible and climate-resilient trees, flowers, and grasses to minimize maintenance costs, particularly during the dry season.
