

Models of Urban Structure

Concentric zone model

-  Central business district
-  Factory zone
-  Zone of transition
-  Zone of working men's homes
-  Residential zone
-  Commuters' zone

Land use is arranged in a series of concentric rings or zones around the city centre. The idea is that the city has grown outward in all directions from the centre, adding new buildings around the edges. The process is rather like the growth rings of trees. It means that the urban fabric should get older towards the centre. The width of the zones varies according to the density of building.

Sector model

-  Central business district
-  Wholesale light manufacturing
-  Low-class residential
-  Medium-class residential
-  High-class residential

Land use is arranged in wedges or sectors which radiate from the city centre. Growth follows a linear pattern along major transport routes or physical features such as river valleys. We assume that once a particular type of land use establishes itself in an area, it attracts similar activities (like industry) and repels dissimilar ones (like high-status housing).

Multiple nuclei model

-  Central business district
-  Wholesale and light manufacturing
-  Low-class residential
-  Medium-class residential
-  High-class residential
-  Heavy manufacturing
-  Outlying business district
-  Industrial suburb

Distinctive land uses form small areas or nuclei such as the central business district, housing estates, industrial estates, and office and retail parks. Often similar activities/types of land use benefit from being clustered together.

Urban Social Structure:

Urban Social Structure James M. Beshers, 1981-04-02 Carefully limiting his analysis to the correlation of residential proximity and marriage social cast class structures and occupational status Dr Beshers clearly demonstrates how census tract data official registrations of residence on marriage licenses and other information can be used to reinforce and corroborate sociological hypotheses Ultimately he develops a theoretical model empirically oriented of the relationship between spatial distribution and social distance in the average American city

The Sociology of Urban Living Harold E. Nottridge, 2013-06-17 The urban setting in which people live has an important influence upon the organization and planning of their social lives H E Nottridge here presents a valuable introduction to the field of urban sociology showing that it is a theoretical discipline which is worthy of consideration in its own right Throughout his account Mr Nottridge places strong emphasis on the need for comparative perspectives He uses a wide range of source material from urban environments as far apart as shanty towns in developing countries and the great metropolitan complexity of London He covers such topics as scope and methods in urban sociology social differences in towns and in the context of urban social structure the family and network theories He also analyses the work of the Chicago School of Weber Tonnies Park Redfield and Wirth assessing their value for modern urban sociology The author concludes with an examination of housing migration and urban poverty This book was first published in 1972

Social Construction In Contemporary China Xueyi Lu, 2017-05-19 Placing the modernization of China in a historical context Social Construction in Contemporary China provides a powerful argument that social construction is instrumental for the country s modernization process and a key factor in China's national rejuvenation. A wide range of topics and issues related to social construction are covered including people's livelihood and social undertakings, income distribution, urban and rural communities, community organizations, social management, social norms, reforms of social institutions and systems, social restructuring, and the process of social construction. In addition to well-informed and insightful analyses of these subjects that draw on the country's historical experiences, contributors also provide policy suggestions on how to tackle problems and respond to challenges. Its breadth and depth make this volume a valuable addition to the growing body of literature on this important topic.

The Community in Urban Society Larry Lyon, Robyn Driskell, 2011-12-16. The community is more than an abstract object of theoretical inquiry. It is also a place where people live. It is difficult to determine where community research and theory merge because the community is a unique place where theory and the real world come together. Local conditions change and new research techniques emerge. In the second edition of The Community in Urban Society, the authors solve this problem by distilling the historic and foundational theories of community, applying traditional approaches, typology, ecology, systems theory, and conflict theory to current conditions, and exploring new and relevant theories that impact today's communities. The latest edition also examines recent and emerging technologies that facilitate examination and evaluation of the modern community condition. Updated coverage includes topics such as New Urbanism, modern network analysis methods, the urban political economy approach to community, the growth machine approach, GIS mapping, recent holistic studies, cyberspace communities, and up-to-date discussions of community indicator studies, quality of life, community power, and regime politics.

Urban Society Noel P. Gist, Leroy Allen Halbert, 1956. Dimensions of Urban Social Structure Frank Lancaster Jones, 1969-12-15. The physical segregation of social groups in industrial cities has long attracted the attention of social scientists and casual observers alike. In Australia, the possibility of mapping the social ecology of large cities has been limited by the absence of sufficiently detailed census information, a gap remedied in 1961 by the provision of a new range of small area data. Here, the author exploits the existence of the new information to present the first intensive social anatomy of any Australian metropolis. Statistics on the residential concentration and segregation of seventy socioeconomic, demographic, ethnic, and religious categories are examined, and the vast complexity and range of these data are reduced by sophisticated techniques of statistical analysis to three theoretically meaningful constructs: social rank, familism, and ethnicity. These constructs are used to develop a typology of social areas which serves as the basis for developing an understanding of and further hypotheses about urban social structure. Not only does this analysis present a self-contained study of Australia's second largest metropolis, but detailed maps and statistical appendixes provide a benchmark for future social investigations into the urban scene on subjects such as political preference, immigrant adjustment, poverty, crime, delinquency, and urban planning.

Transforming Chinese Cities Mark Wang, Pookong Kee, Jia Gao, 2014-04-03. The urbanisation of China over the last three decades has been a hugely significant development both for China's reform process and for the world more
