The Economic Consequences of the Peace - John Maynard Keynes John Maynard Keynes,2009-12-09 A passage from the book The power to become habituated to his surroundings is a marked characteristic of mankind Very few of us realize with conviction the intensely unusual unstable complicated unreliable temporary nature of the economic organization by which Western Europe has lived for the last half century We assume some of the most peculiar and temporary of our late advantages as natural permanent and to be depended on and we lay our plans accordingly On this sandy and false foundation we scheme for social improvement and dress our political platforms pursue our animosities and particular ambitions and feel ourselves with enough margin in hand to foster not assuage civil conflict in the European family Moved by insane delusion and reckless self regard the German people overturned the foundations on which we all lived and built But the spokesmen of the French and British peoples have run the risk of completing the ruin which Germany began by a Peace which if it is carried into effect must impair yet further when it might have restored the delicate complicated organization already shaken and broken by war through which alone the European peoples can employ themselves and live In England the outward aspect of life does not yet teach us to feel or realize in the least that an age is over We are busy picking up the threads of our life where we dropped them with this difference only that many of us seem a good deal richer than we were before Where we spent millions before the war we have now learnt that we can spend hundreds of millions and apparently not suffer for it Evidently we did not exploit to the utmost the possibilities of our economic life
