Urban Consumer Theory:

Urban Consumer Theory Geoffrey K. Turnbull, 1995 Urban consumer theory focuses on the spatial dimension of household work residence decisions and provides the intellectual foundation for much of what constitutes urban and real estate economics This book provides the first complete exposition of consumer location theory bringing together various models scattered throughout the literature into a single comprehensive framework Because urban households can move in response to changes in their income prices of housing and other goods transportation costs etc urban consumer theory adds a spatial dimension to the analysis of behavior This text begins with an exposition of these responses using a simple unified model that is then extended to cover a variety of rather advanced issues For example the effects of household labor leisure choices government tax and housing subsidy programs and recent developments in effects of uncertainty are all analyzed using simple extensions of the basic model In all cases the exposition includes graphical demonstration of the household's responses which makes the results accessible to those with less mathematical preparation The second in the series of monographs sponsored by the American Real Estate and Urban Economics Association AREUEA Series editor Anthony M J Yezer It should be invaluable as a core text for students of urban and real estate economics and a valuable reference for those involved in applications of consumer location theory

Consumer demand and willingness to pay for safe food in Accra, Ghana: Implications for public and private sectors' roles in food safety management Ragasa, Catherine, Andam, Kwaw S., Amewu, Sena, Asante, Seth, 2019-01-10 Consumer demand for food safety is likely to be an important driver of public policies and industry led efforts to reduce information asymmetry on food attributes and improved food safety This paper examines the attribute demand for chicken meat and tilapia among 803 shoppers in Accra Ghana Freshness is the main attribute demanded by the overwhelming majority of shoppers followed by food safety price taste and size Consumers are willing to pay price premiums for food safety certifications i.e. those certified according to Hazard Analysis and Critical Control Point HACCP principles or certified as free of antibiotic residue However the price premium shoppers are willing to pay for improved food safety vary by shoppers type A third of tilapia shoppers and half of chicken meat shoppers are classified as food safety conscious shoppers and willing to pay a 10 to 12 percent higher price than noncertified products In comparison only a tenth of shoppers are considered to be price conscious and willing to pay a small premium 1 percent for certified safe foods We also tested an information treatment on the negative health implications of food contamination and its effect on shoppers decisions The information treatment randomly assigned to shoppers was a significant predictor of food safety attribute demand for chicken meat but not for tilapia which may be linked to greater awareness of and concern about antibiotic misuse in poultry production Our findings generally point to a concern about food safety and a strong demand and willingness among consumers to pay premiums for certified safe foods thus providing support for public or industry led schemes to provide food safety information to consumers
