Residential Crowding and Design John R. Aiello,Andrew Baum,2012-12-06 The intent of this book is threefold 1 to summarize recent research concerned with residential crowding 2 to present some new perspectives on this important subject and 3 to consider design implications and recommendations that can be derived from the existing body of research We have sought to bring together the work of many of the researchers most involved in these areas and have asked them to go beyond their data to present new insights into response to residential crowding and to speculate about the meaning of their work for the present and future design of residential environments We feel that this endeavor has been successful and that the present volume will help to advance our understanding of these issues The study of residential density is not new Studies in this area were conducted by sociologists as early as the 1920s yielding moderate correlational relationships between census tract density and various social and physical pathologies This work however has been heavily criticized because it did not adequately consider confounding social structural factors such as social class and ethnicity The research that will be presented in the present volume represents a new generation of crowding investigation All of the work has been conducted during the 1970s and a range of methodological strategies have been employed in these studies

Cognitive Ecology of Pollination Lars Chittka,James D. Thomson,2001-05-28 Important breakthroughs have recently been made in our understanding of the cognitive and sensory abilities of pollinators how pollinators perceive memorise and react to floral signals and rewards how they work flowers move among inflorescences and transport pollen These new findings have obvious implications for the evolution of floral display and diversity but most existing publications are scattered across a wide range of journals in very different research traditions This book brings together for the first time outstanding scholars from many different fields of pollination biology integrating the work of neuroethologists and evolutionary ecologists to present a multi disciplinary approach Aimed at graduates and researchers of behavioural and pollination ecology plant evolutionary biology and neuroethology it will also be a useful source of information for anyone interested in a modern view of cognitive and sensory ecology pollination and floral evolution
