Civil Defense Implications of Current and Future Urban Configurations Henry L. Woltman, E. C. Goodrow, 1963 This report examines the possibilities of vulnerability reduction through long term changes in urban form and structure in the light of projected trends in economic and social forces affecting future urban development Urban decentralization is likely to continue in the future and technological change may permit deliberate acceleration of this trend toward sprawling urban regions Various conceptual and empirical urban forms are reducible to a few basic types The vulnerability characteristics of the different forms are mixed but the galaxy and dispersed sheet forms are generally best suited to civil defense purposes These are similar to the forms that future urban regions are expected to take A variant of the dispersed sheet form is considered the most advantageous it would provide compact urban communities separated by extensive open spaces devoted to nonurban land uses within future metropolitan areas In addition efforts to increase the hardness of urban structures are desirable An increased proportion of high hardness structural types should be encouraged in the building mix This increase should take the form mainly of high hardness residential structures dispersed singly or in clusters throughout residential areas Indirect methods are considered by which progress toward these objectives might be assisted through various ongoing Federal and state governmental activities Author
