The Development of Eco Cities in China Juke Liu, Weiping Sun, Wenzhen Hu, 2016-10-17 This book presents an in-depth study on and summary of the current practice and theories for the construction of eco cities in China in the context of the country's rapid urbanization. It argues that by 2020 60% of China's population will live in cities. And the evolution from green cities to eco cities and subsequently to smart cities is crucial to China's sustainable development. The book presents a feasible and objective quantitative evaluation system for the sustainable and healthy development of eco cities. It summarizes the Chinese experience in building eco cities as the coordinated development of economy, society, resources, and environment with the goal being to make cities inclusive, safe, resilient, and sustainable. This is essential to achieving a number of the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals. In addition, the book defines the current stage of development Chinese cities have reached in terms of ecological construction and offers guidance on selecting suitable urban ecological construction modes and improvement approaches. It provides a valuable reference source and guidebook for research on and the practice of eco city construction. Accordingly, it will help other countries around the world, especially the developing countries, to benefit from China's successful experience.

The Development Wyszcie Shionyu Chang, 1925 Researches Into the Early History of Mankind and the Development of Civilization (Classic Reprint) Edward Burnett Tylor, 2017-10-12 Excerpt from Researches Into the Early History of Mankind and the Development of Civilization. In the first place, when a general law can be inferred from a group of facts, the use of detailed history is very much superseded. When we see a magnet attract a piece of iron, having come by experience to the general law that magnets attract iron, we do not take the trouble to go into the history of the particular magnet in question. To some extent, this direct reference to general laws may be made in the study of civilization. The four next chapters of the present book treat of the various ways in which man utters his thoughts in Gestures, Words, Pictures, and Writing. Here, though, speech and writing must be investigated historically, depending as they do in so great measure on the words and characters which were current in the world thousands of years ago. On the other hand, the gesture language and picture writing may be mostly explained without the aid of history as direct products of the human mind. In the following chapter on Images and Names, an attempt is made to refer a great part of the beliefs and practices included under the general name of magic to one very simple mental law, as resulting from a condition of mind which we of the more advanced races have almost outgrown and in doing so have undergone one of the most notable changes which we can trace as having happened to mankind. And lastly, a particular habit of mind accounts for a class of stories which are here grouped together as Myths of Observation, as distinguished from the tales which make up the great bulk of the folk lore of the world, many of which latter are now being shown by the new school of comparative mythology in Germany and England to have come into existence also by virtue of a general law, but a very different one.
